

Has someone you know gone missing? What to do when someone goes missing abroad

Factsheet 6

This factsheet includes information on:

- Report the person missing
 - If you are in the UK..... Page 2
 - If you are abroad..... Page 2
- The Foreign and Commonwealth Office..... Page 2
- 116 000 Helpline..... Page 3
- Information you should provide..... Page 3
- What UK police can do to help..... Page 4
- What you can do..... Page 4
- Helpful organisations
 - Lucie Blackman Trust..... Page 5
 - International Child Abduction and Contact Unit..... Page 5
 - FCO Forced Marriage Unit..... Page 5
 - Children and Families Across Borders..... Page 5
- If you have lost contact
 - The Salvation Army..... Page 5
 - The British Red Cross..... Page 5
 - General Register Office..... Page 6

It can be a traumatic experience when someone goes missing and it may be especially hard to know what to do when someone goes missing abroad. Helpful information on how to report the person missing and how to access help is outlined below.

Report the person missing

If you have recently lost contact with a family member who is travelling overseas, the first thing to do is report the person as missing to the police.

If you are in the UK

If you are in the UK, you should report the person as missing to the UK police. Ideally this should be to the police force for the area in which the person normally lives, although if you report it to a different police force, they should pass the details on to the relevant force. All UK police forces use the 101 non-emergency number, which can be used to report a missing person.

After the police take down the details of the missing person, they should inform UK's SIRENE bureau¹ or Interpol, which can liaise with the relevant foreign police force, because the UK police does not have the automatic right to investigate on foreign soil when someone goes missing overseas. SIRENE/Interpol may then ask for enquiries to be made in the country in which the person was last seen.

If you are abroad

If you are abroad, you should report the person as missing to the local police in the country you are in. Provide as much information as possible and the police will pass on the details to SIRENE/Interpol, so that the investigating team can co-ordinate with the UK authorities. Make a note of any reference numbers they give you. The local police force has jurisdiction and should make enquiries to help find the missing person.

If you are abroad, you should also telephone the UK police to report the person missing. You should report the person missing to the police force for the area where the person normally lives. The telephone numbers for UK police forces can be obtained from the website www.police.uk/?view=force_sites or the police force's own website, 101 cannot be used outside of the UK.

¹ Information will be sent to SIRENE if the person is missing in a country which uses the Schengen Information System; a list of these countries can be found at: <https://www.app.college.police.uk/app-content/investigations/european-investigations/schengen-information-system/>. If the person is missing in any other country, the information will be sent to Interpol to assist.
UKMPUFactsheet6

When you report the person missing, provide as much information as possible, including any reference numbers given to you by the police in the country you are currently in. The UK police force will then initiate liaison with the foreign police force through SIRENE/Interpol if required.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO)

If you suspect a relative or friend has gone missing abroad, you should also contact the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) on +44 (0)207 008 1500 and ask for the Consular Directorate. You will need to provide them with details of the country the person is believed to have gone missing in, where they were last seen and when you last had contact with them.

The FCO can only help in cases where regular contact has unexpectedly been lost. They cannot help if you wish to trace someone you lost contact with a long time ago (see below for organisations that may be able to assist in this case).

The FCO may be able to:

- Check their records to see if the missing person has come to their attention (although legislation may prevent them from releasing information without the person's consent)
- Liaise with the local authorities; they will keep you informed of their progress
- Pass on to the appropriate UK authorities any requests from host governments for help in mounting a search, rescue and recovery operation
- Provide you with details of any local organisations specialising in tracing missing persons
- Provide contact details for local private detectives. However, they cannot guarantee the professional capability of any person or company
- Appoint a caseworker in London with whom you can liaise

- Embassy staff can arrange to meet you if you are already abroad or if you decide to travel abroad to search yourself
- Arrange press or TV appeals in the relevant country
- Provide information on local printing companies, should you wish to initiate a poster and leaflet campaign. They can advise you on suitable poster locations.

What the FCO cannot do:

- Conduct physical searches on your behalf
- Provide financial assistance for rescue operations of people in remote areas
- Pay for a body to be returned to the UK
- Control media coverage of the case.

Information to help you locate your nearest British Embassy if you are overseas can be found at www.gov.uk/government/world/embassies

Contact details for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO):

Telephone: +44 (0) 207 008 1500

Website:

www.gov.uk/government/organisations/foreign-commonwealth-office

It should be noted that the FCO can only assist individuals who are British Nationals, or if the person missing is a British National. If this is not the case, contact should be made with the relevant Embassy for your Country.

116 000 Helpline

If you are in Europe and your child has gone missing, you can also call the 116 000 hotline number which has been created as a helpline in case a child goes missing.

The 116 000 phone number will put you in contact with an organisation which can support you and provide assistance.

Remember that you will still need to report your child missing to the local police.

The 116 000 number will be answered by a charity in the country you are calling from, which deals with missing children. The charity should be able to provide information and assistance and put you in contact with local authorities. The 116 000 number can also be used to take sighting reports and other information from members of the public, which can then be passed on to the relevant police force.

The 116 000 number is currently operating in the following countries: Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Spain and the UK.

Information you should provide

When reporting a person missing abroad, you should try to provide as much information as possible about the missing person, such as:

- Name, date and place of birth
- The time and place that last contact was made
- Their travel itinerary and where you think they may be
- Mobile phone number and/or email address
- Their passport details
- The name of the company they have travel insurance with and any other details of their travel insurance policy that you may have
- A recent photograph.

If your friend or relative uses an internet site which they regularly update with details of where they are and perhaps who they are with, it is important that this information is also provided to the police and the FCO. For example, this might be an online travel blog, a personal website, a social networking site or a photo site, such as Flickr. Some of these sites may include geocoded or geotagged photographs uploaded by the missing person, which might include location information that may be of use to the investigation.

What UK police can do to help

Please be aware that responsibility for conducting searches overseas rests with the local police force in the country where the person has gone missing.

The UK police may assist with enquiries, but it is rare for them to become actively involved in the case. This is because they do not have the legal authority to carry out an investigation outside the UK and they can only do so with the permission of the country involved.

However, in most cases, the UK police can send requests via SIRENE or Interpol to the police force in the country where the person has gone missing, asking for enquiries to be made.

In some circumstances, the UK police may be granted permission to travel to the country where the person has gone missing, but this is rare and depends on permission being granted by that country. Even if a UK police force is given permission to travel to the country, they still might not be given permission to actively carry out any enquiries.

Sometimes, the police in the UK may be able to carry out some helpful enquiries in the UK to assist the search for your missing loved one. For example, checking financial records and collecting forensic material, such as DNA or fingerprints.

Financial records

In some cases, the missing person's UK bank or building society may be able to advise the police when and where their account was last accessed. The bank may require an official police request from a UK police force before they agree to provide this information. In some cases, it may be necessary for the police in the country where the person has gone missing to place this request via SIRENE/Interpol.

Forensic material

DNA samples and other forensic material like fingerprints and dental records may be useful to the investigation and may be collected by the police. You may wish to identify a personal item belonging to the missing person to give to the police. A toothbrush, hairbrush or razor could provide a DNA profile, as long as this was only used by the missing person. In some cases, it may be helpful for a relative to provide a DNA sample.

UKMPUFactsheet6

There is a UK Missing Persons DNA Database which contains DNA profiles for individuals who have gone missing and for unidentified persons, bodies and body parts. There is also a DNA database maintained by Interpol in Lyon, France, to collect and compare DNA across international borders for Interpol's member countries. In some cases it may be relevant for the missing person's DNA to be checked against this. However, the Interpol database does not hold a large number of profiles and due to differences in DNA collection and sampling in different countries, it may not always be appropriate to check DNA against the Interpol database.

What you can do

Consider the following when trying to trace a person believed to be missing abroad:

- When and why were you expecting contact from them?
- Was there anything in their last communication with you that might suggest where they are now or why they might not have been in touch?
- Was there anything posted on their online social networking, blogging or information sharing websites that might suggest where they are now and/or who they may recently have been with?
- You may wish to contact the family of any travelling companions or other people with whom the missing person might have been in contact with whilst abroad, to see if they have any helpful information
- Consider creating an online publicity campaign; placing details
- In some countries, it may be possible to offer a reward for information. Consider the implications of this and contact an organisation that has experience of tracing missing persons for advice, such as the Lucie Blackman Trust (see below)
- Before making any plans to travel to the country, consider what you would be able to achieve. Authorities in the country may be reluctant to pass on information. You should also consider your own personal safety.

Helpful organisations

There are other organisations which may be able to provide you with assistance:

Lucie Blackman Trust

The Lucie Blackman Trust (previously known as Missing Abroad) is a charity which provides support and advice to those whose family or friends are missing overseas. More information can be obtained from their website or by contacting them directly.

Telephone: +44 (0)198 371 8802

Email: ops@lbtrust.org

Website: www.lbtrust.org

International Child Abduction and Contact Unit (ICACU)

The International Child Abduction and Contact Unit is the Central Authority in England and Wales for the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. The ICACU is based within the Office of the Official Solicitor and Public Trustee. They may be able to help if your child has been taken abroad without your consent and kept overseas against your wishes.

Telephone: +44 (0)203 681 2608

Email: enquiries@offsol.gsi.gov.uk

Website: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/international-child-abduction-and-contact-unit-application-form>

FCO Forced Marriage Unit

If you are worried that someone may have stopped contact or be missing due to having been forced into marriage, the FCO Forced Marriage Unit (FMU) can provide confidential advice and assistance. More information can be accessed via the FCO FMU website.

Telephone: +44 (0)207 008 0151

Email: fmu@fco.gov.uk

Website: www.gov.uk/stop-forced-marriage

Children and Families Across Borders (CFAB)

Children and Families Across Borders (CFAB) assists people who have been separated from family members as a result of divorce, migration, seeking asylum, trafficking and abduction. It also supports people for whom there are protection concerns, including children and vulnerable adults who may have been abducted or trafficked. CFAB assists in cases where children are separated from one or both parents, aiming to reunite children with their families and assist children and adults to re-establish and maintain contact with parents and family members.

Telephone: +44 (0)207 735 8941
(free advice and information hotline)

Email: info@cfab.uk.net

Website: www.cfab.org.uk/

You may also find the factsheet Organisations that provide help and support useful. This can be downloaded from the UK Missing Persons Unit website: <http://missingpersons.police.uk>

If you have lost contact

The following organisations may be able to assist people who have lost contact with a relative at home or abroad, over a long period of time. They may not be able to help if you have recently lost contact with a family member who is travelling overseas, however.

The Salvation Army

The Salvation Army provides a service for tracing adult relatives with whom contact has been lost. Its Family Tracing Service operates in 100 countries throughout the world.

Telephone: +44 (0)207 367 4747

Email: family.tracing@salvationarmy.org.uk

Website: www.salvationarmy.org.uk/Contact-Us-Family-Tracing

British Red Cross

The British Red Cross' international family tracing and message exchange services are aimed at restoring and maintaining family links between close relatives who have been separated as a result of armed conflict, natural or other disasters.

Telephone: +44 (0)344 871 1111

Website: www.redcross.org.uk/trace

General Register Office

The Overseas Department of the General Register Office holds records of births, marriages and deaths of British Citizens overseas that have been registered with British authorities.

Telephone: 0300 123 1837

Email: certificate.services@gro.gsi.gov.uk

Website:

<https://www.gro.gov.uk/gro/content/certificates/faqs-overseas.asp>

For additional advice on tracing someone you have lost contact with, see our Lost Contact Factsheet, available from the UK Missing Persons Unit website:
<http://missingpersons.police.uk>

If you require more information, other factsheets can be downloaded from the UK Missing Persons Unit website: <http://missingpersons.police.uk>.

To enquire about the content of this document or request the information in an alternative format, please contact the UK Missing Persons Unit on 0800 234 6034 or email ukmpu@nca.gov.uk

The information in this guide is not definitive and should be utilised in conjunction with police guidance and independent legal advice.